LIFE'S WAY.

By "UNCLE HENRY."

A tramp who was stealing a ride on a P. & E. freight train fell off at Luskott Station and was crushed to death beneath the wheels. His condition indicated that he had become weak from long sickness or hunger and that his head, as he rode upon the bumper, received a severe blow.

I never read such intelligence, and yet it is a common item of news, with only slight change in the wording, without something like a twang at my heart strings. The horror so briefly told, a life so shockingly ended, a frustration of the purpose or the hope which prompted the stolen ride; regret that anyone's loved one should die; a designated tramp, are thoughts which crowd my mind and cause me to shudder. This is no doubt the case with others, but with me memory is refreshed and a sad incident of life is lived over again.

Years ago I was doing reportorial work on a Western paper. One afternoon a man was being crushed by a train of cars. I had been on such missions before and had well formed my story ere I reached the scene of the accident. But I didn't write the account and for reason.

When I came to the scene a crowd was standing about what I considered the unfortunate man. Walking up to the gathering I peered over the shoulders of several men and saw lying upon the ground the injured man. A leg and nearly an entire arm were gone, and apparently he was dead. Two surgeons had just arisen from the work of bandaging the injured limbs.

"It is the old story," said one of the men, of whom I had asked the stereotyped question as to how it had happened. "He was trying to steal a ride off a freight and is now way out clear off beneath the wheels."

"Was he not observed and warned?" I asked.

"Oh, yes. But he said that his mother was dying and he must go, and that he had no money or time to spare. His determination made the men less watchful, so don't."

Recalling a story in connection with the accident I asked: "Did he say where he wished to go?"

"To D—, where he said his people live."

"To D—? That is my old home. Did you hear his name?"

"He told those who lifted him up that his name was Masters or Mastron—'Charley I believe.'"

"An old schoolmate?" I had just said when the crowd began to fall back. I could then see Masters well and for an instant I was as if rushed to the ground. My mind was so flooded with thoughts of other days. But I nerved myself and pressing forward reached the side of the surgeons.

"Gentlemen," said I, "this is an old friend of mine. Can he be sent to the hospital for—?" I was about to say attention, but I could do so the elder surgeon said:

"The ambulance is coming."

"His chance to live—what are they?" I asked.

"One in a thousand."

Charley was under the influence of the anesthetic given him and seemed then as dead. He was still in that condition when the ambulance came and he was lifted up and started toward the hospital. Instantly I decided to follow and if possible to remain with him until he was sent to the office and I could write and send to the office an explanation of my whereabouts. At the hospital through the privilege of my calling I secured permission to go to Charley's side and remain. But he never rallied, and in a few hours I closed his eyes in death. I took a flickering candle his life went out.

My vigil was not without some reward, though my presence was never recognized by Charley. Believing followed the wearing away of the anesthetic and he talked much of himself enlightening me of his life since I had left D— and him still in school.

Several years before Charley, though still in his teens, had run away from home, and been lost since to his parents. He could not accept a childing for conduct at school and thus chose to injure himself and wound his parents. But somehow he had seemed to learn that his mother was ill and his heart had been touched and he was endeavoring to reach her side, to seek her forgiveness ere it was too late. Once Charley seemed to think he was with his mother for he said:

"The very night I went away I wanted to come back, but I was ashamed over my act. After several days I didn't feel any homesick and then I met with some men who were going out West and I decided to go with them. Way off there I felt that I could not stand it, but I soon got used to it and had soon almost forgotten you and father and your love for me. Then I saw an older man and didn't care. One night I was riding on a freight car and when I awoke I found myself in a new place. I could hardly realize I was not at home."

That day I had several cries and often said to myself I will go home. Then I began to wonder if I had a home and if you and father still lived, and I decided to return to you and father and the next morning I started. So long have I been coming and I am so weak, so weak. My money gave out and when I reached D— and here he shuddered as if recalling the horror of his injury. "And I tried to steal a ride, and—my mamma I forgot how I got home. But I am so glad that I am here, so glad that I am here."

Often there was silence for several minutes as Charley talked and it was clear he was weakening fast. Once I thought he had spoken his last word, so long was his voice still, but he rallied and faintly said:

"Do you forgive your boy mamma, and do you again love him? Then I am so glad, so glad. I shall be a better boy after tonight, and this I promise you—this I promise you."

"These words were spoken with great effort and they were the last that Charley uttered. There was a shudder of the body—one of a number—and the nurse who had stood by felt his pulse and said:

"Your friend is dying; he is dead."

Tears filled my eyes, but I wiped them away. I reached over and closed Charley's eyes in his final sleep.

It was midnight when I looked at my watch. Soon I had given orders relative to disposal of his remains and then I returned to the office to write a few guarded words to Charley's mother. Intending these should reach her before the intelligence of his death might, I had just seated myself for this purpose when the telegraph office came to me and said:

"Your friend is dying; he is dead."

"Yes," was my reply, and then, with some curiosity, for I couldn't think he had heard of Charley's death, I added, "But why do you ask?"

"Here is a brief message of a death which occurred there tonight and I thought perhaps you could add to its contents."

I took the message and read it with one exception of my eyes. I was shocked to discover it was information of the death of Charley's mother. According to the telegram had died about the same time her son had.

A touching story of the two deaths appeared in the paper the next morning. It was written by an associate to whom I gave the facts. I read it in the paper as I whirled with the train on which I had shipped Charley's remains to D—.

The article was captioned "Life's Way."

There was a double burial in D— in the family grounds of the town's cemetery were placed, side by side, the body of Charley and his mother. As I stood and watched the internment I had but one thought, and it was, that Charley and his mother left the earth together and were united in the hereafter if they could not be in life.

HOW DO I KNOW?

With a neighbor's heart:

The bitter, biting blasts that were into his innocent core?

How do I know the every fact, the pro and con exact.

To sentence pass on brother's guilt by circumstantial built?

How do I know the failure dira, what battle's din and are, the all unaided, had to face.

Before he fell from grace? How do I know—how dare I boast That I know—how dare I boast God grant beneath a lesser gun I may not frighten him.

How do I know the discipline Of those, the few who win? Until my flag decka higher flag.

"This honor not to brag," Kathleen Kavanagh in The Times-Democrat.

THOSE GOWNS.

"Where does the supreme court of the United States hold forth?" asked the visitor in Washington.

"In that room," said the official, "and in that room the official lounge."

"That's what some other fellow told me," rejoined the stranger. "But there ain't nobody in there except a lot of bearded old women dressed in black."

—Chicago Tribune.

An exchange tells of a lady who decided to secure her husband who was a hard drinker, so he would reform. To do so she procured the costume of a devil, which she saw at a masquerade.

The next time the erring spouse came home feeling happy she quickly donned the costume, as he opened the door she stepped forward and said in a cheerful tone: "Come with me, I am the devil." The result rather startled her, as the response to her grin was: "Zat so? Shike, did I say, I'm your brother-in-law. I married your sister."

BAHRAIN DAY.

"Why am I not shown common courtesy?" demanded the woman warmly. The sales person lost her temper at once.

"You didn't ask to be shown any thing but two-cent prints!" retorted the latter.

Moreover it was bargain day, when the amount of common courtesy to a customer was necessarily limited.

Our experience has been that fully half of them are ladies.—Boston Evening Transcript.

OPEN THE DOOR.

Open the door, let in the air; The winds are sweet, and the flowers are fair. Joy is abroad in the world to-day; If our door is white it may come this way.

Open the door! Open the door, let in the sun; He hath a smile for every one; He hath made of the raindrops gold and gems. He may change our tears to diamonds.

Open the door! Open the door of the soul, let in strong, pure thoughts which shall banish sin. They will grow and bloom with a grace divine. And their fruit shall be sweeter than that of the vine.

Open the door! Open the door of the heart; let in sympathy sweet for stranger and kin. It will make the halls of the heart so fair. That angles may enter unawares.

Open the door! —British Weekly

THE RED, RED ROSES.

All in a sunny garden grew Red roses, rich and fair; The fragrance of their ruddy hearts Perfumed the enchanted air.

Wandering thence I plucked a rose, I breathed its beauty bright. But still winds swept the garden path.

And spilt its petals light. Now in my garden lies that flower, its petals all unbound. But my stained hands are all unblest Their spotless blooms to hold.

I place them on the altar high. Love in my heart is dead. Oh, why are roses passing fair, And why are roses red?

—Edith Wheeler in The Muse.

The parlor entertainer has some amusing experiences, although he is not always good natured enough to tell them against himself. One who appreciates a joke, however, relates that on a certain occasion he had been performing at an "old home" and responding to so many queries that the program became unusually long.

After it was over his hostess with her young daughter came up to him and, after congratulating him on the success of the afternoon, said most cordially: "Oh, Mr. Hank, come and have some refreshments and sit down for a while. I know you must be awfully tired."

"Yes," chimed in the sweet young daughter, with the best intentions in the world; "I'm sure we are."—New York Mail and Express.

A Mate as a Life Saver.

The mine mule knows a thing or two quite as well as does the army mule. In one of the mines in the Pittsburgh district the ever patient mule proved himself possessed of an almost human sense of coming danger. One morning when the full shift was at work there occurred an unusual thing. The air currents had seemed defective, and there was a restless feeling among the miners, something like the uneasiness of live stock before a storm. A few days previous a chamber had been closed on account of gas, and the men were instinctively thinking of what that might mean. Suddenly there was a clatter of hoofs, and a mule appeared. Its long ears were quivering, and its intelligent eyes were full of terror.

It gave a shrill cry and then was gone down the entry, broken traces flying after it. The men looked at one another, and then the feverishness of the air moved them with one impulse. Drooping picks, they fled precipitately, making a headlong dash through the labyrinth for the open air. With scared faces other miners joined them, and while they were wondering what it all meant a dull, deep explosion went rumbling through the hollow back of the mine, followed by wave upon wave of noxious vapors. Then they understood. When the bodies of the few poor men who had been hopelessly entangled were recovered, another was tenderly carried out with theirs—that of the little gray mule that sounded the warning.—Lusk's Weekly.

Acceptance Warrant.

It was probably the character of a hater that the sergeant was regarded by the Milesians, since most of the localities of Ireland connected with traditions of these reptiles destroyed by St. Patrick were esteemed places of holiness. To these spots, generally holy wells, the people of the west and ignorant classes still resort on pious pilgrimages taking relief from their infirmities. They drink of the sacred waters and meditate about the fount on their knees, while repeating their prayers, and it is a curious fact, as we are informed by an old time traveler in Ireland, that this circling was formerly done "groveling on hands and knees or even lying flat on the ground and wriggling like a snake."

This must undoubtedly have been a relic of the ancient rites, though the people had not the slightest idea of its origin or even that such a religion had ever existed on their island.

In this way they still on Beltane eve (the time, or the fire) kindle "bale fires" on the summit of every hill and send flaming wheels rolling down their sides, though ignorant that they are celebrating a day consecrated to Bel, or Baal, by their Pagan and Irish ancestors, who observed it in a precisely similar manner.—New Lippincott.

During practice a good stroke is one who is regular in his rowing and easy to follow. If a must give the big men plenty of time to finish the stroke out. He must keep them swinging steadily, and in a trial over the whole or any portion of the course he must not suddenly come out of the water, so that they are completely rowed out without having got short or forced on the way. In a race he must know the capabilities of his crew and must be able to feel how they are going, when they want coming off and when they are capable of higher pressure, while above all he must know that degree of generalship which will enable him to decide in a well contested race when to put the pressure on in order to take the advantage of station at a certain point of the course, when to ease off if he is holding his opponent at a slower rate of stroke, how far it is necessary for him to save himself for an effort at the end and especially in a really close contest the exact moment at which he should make the "grande attaque."—Saturday Review.

TILMAN AND M'LAURIN'S FINISH FIGHT

South Carolina Will Be the Scene of the Bitterest Political Duel Ever Fought in This Country.

This summer will see waged in the Palmetto State a fight that means political death for either Senator Tilman or Senator M'Laurin, and one that may prove fatal to both. Governor McSweeney has been urged to settle the matter by taking advantage of the resignation of the warring senators and appointing successors to fill the vacancies, but this he says he will not do. There are several candidates for at least one of the vacant senatorships and Governor McSweeney is himself among the number.

THE ONLOOKER: What He Sees and What He Hears.....

"The key which transmits the Morse signals today is practically the same as that by Thomas A. Edison, Andrew Carnegie and other telegraphers thirty years ago," says Electricity. "The Twentieth century telegraph key, designed by a prominent official in one of the large telegraph companies, is intended to increase the speed of the operator, and to prevent telegraphers' paralysis. It is a radical departure from the old key, which consists of a handle that may be grasped by the whole hand or operated by the touch of any finger or part of the hand. It is unnecessary to retain a firm hold upon this handle, and the fingers may be shifted as desired during transmission. It can be turned completely around at will, so that any desired position may be assumed instantly. It is the cramped position of the fingers on the familiar key-knob that causes paralysis of the operator's wrist, or at least great distress. This instrument has been in use on the Journal Examiner leased wire, working direct from New York to San Francisco, a distance of 3,500 miles, a speed of 3,000 words an hour being maintained."

A well known engineer had an experience several nights ago that he said frightened him out of three years growth. "I was on my engine," he related, "and was making up lost time between here and Louisville. I am on the night run and had been delayed at Fulton. I had the throttle wide open and a full head of steam and we were not going less than a mile a minute. I slowed up for a curve and then let her go again and settled down for a good long run on a level stretch. Suddenly we hit something on the track. It looked to me like a pile of ties, and the engine lurched up for a brief period of time and then fell back. The cars then came piling on top of us and before I knew what had happened I was pinned between the tank and the ground with wreckage piled up above me for a mile high it seemed. Then became unconscious. When I awoke I was still in the wreck but somehow had attempted to extricate my body from the debris and they had only partially succeeded in their efforts. I seemed all right except that I could not move my feet nor hands. I then woke up and tried to collect my scattered wits. I was as wide awake as I am now and when I found that I could neither move hands or feet you can imagine my fright. I still had use of my lungs and I tell you I did not hesitate in bringing their powers into action. Several of the boys heard me and came over to relieve me of the burden of my ankles and feet."

The brick street and the street sprinkler have had much to do with the bicycle scorching "going slow" on Broadway. When the street has been well sprinkled and when it has the usual accumulation of dirt on it a scorching is as much in danger of its life as the red stars in the path. There have been several small accidents since the brick street was made but lately they did not seem serious. When a rider is going rapidly and attempts to turn a corner he is certain to pay Mother Earth a sudden and unintended visit. Another way the scorching is brought in check is by being forced to cross the street car track. The front wheel generally clears the rail all right but the rear wheel, nine times out of ten, will slide and the best rider on the slope can get the expedition a mere humiliation. The rider's plight when a scorching has been marked by the number of scorched tires that

MR. DOOLEY REVIEWS THE SUPREME COURT'S DECISION.

By F. P. DUNNE

Copyright 1901, by Robert Howard Russell.

"I see," said Mr. Dooley, "the Supreme Court has decided the constitution doesn't follow the flag."

"Who said it did?" asked Mr. Hennessy.

"Some man," said Mr. Dooley. "It happened a long time ago and I don't remember clearly how it came up, but some fellow said that wherever the constitution went, the flag was sure to go."

TO BE QUEEN OF THE P. W. LEAGUE.

Mrs. Edwin Knowles Will Be Retaining Star of the Professional Woman's League.

The League that numbers among its members so many stars of the dramatic stage, so many lights of literature and so many women noted in other branches of art, will henceforth have as its presiding officer Mrs. Edwin Knowles. She was installed as successor to Mrs. A. M. Palmer to the accompaniment of floods of tears, cellophane of tea and a profusion of flowers.

IN DEBT ALL AROUND

Owen Finnigan, a right brave-hearted son of Erin, began life actively as a deck hand on an Alabama River steamer in the palm days of steamboating, before the railroad removed most of its picturesque and comfortable craft from the inland waters.

Finnigan declared, according to Hans Taylor, that when he was a deck hand, the cook, who was also an Irishman, would call to him: "Ah, there, Finnigan, ye blackguard, come and eat. And be in a hurry, ye spalpeen."

Finnigan would hurry forward to get his humble dinner.

Finally Finnigan got to be an officer on the boat, and the cook's tongue changed to: "Mr. Finnigan, dinner is ready."

In the fulness of time Finnigan became captain, and the cook's speech underwent another change: "Captain Finnigan, ye honor, will you please take your tea?"

That was the cook's way of acknowledging that Finnigan had reached the top of the ladder. And the story that "Hans" tells bristles with that worldly wisdom that comes of human experience.

There was a man in Mobile many years ago, so the story goes, who had a notably personal resemblance to Finnigan. This man was noted for contracting debts and never paying them, for thriftless habits generally, and for partaking of too much strong drink.

A visitor to Mobile approached this man one night in Royal street, and asked him: "Aren't you Owen Finnigan?"

"I dunno, I dunno," answered the poor fellow in a wondering way. "I am owing everybody else. I reckon I am owing Finnigan, too."—Boston Courier.

Ottoman Empire Administration

Osad Mukhtar Pasha, Ottoman High Commissioner in Egypt, has made a report to the Porte relative to the internal administration of the Ottoman empire and urging various reforms, including liberty of the press, appointment to office by merit, the creation of a council of notables with control of the finances, independent tribunals, and the abolition of the palace veto on the decisions of the council of ministers.

Indiana Garbages Law

The garbage law of Indiana provides that in the case of foreign corporations or non-residents, or of persons seeking to leave the state, or to remove their property from it, or to conceal themselves so that a summons would not reach them, the disputed money or note may be garnished.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

Something Old, Something New, Chiefly Borrowed, and For You.

I once asked my dainty, plainly dressed maid, why working-girls wore such unfitted clothes on the street. "Well, you see, ma'am," she said, half in pity, half in defense, "the poor things have no other place to wear them." Do you suppose that is why so many of their mistresses laconically do the same?—Helen Waterson Moody, in The Ladies' Home Journal for June.

An old dinner table decoration was shown recently in London, where there were about sixteen guests, and, of course, a large board. The center was set out on an old fashioned orchard, with small apple and pear trees growing out of soft green turf. Little gravel paths were really carried out, and small bridges thrown over miniature streams, the whole looking most effective on the snowy table cloth under a soft, restful, light effect.

The tubbing possibilities of silk madras is said to be excellent. It not only washes with all the good humor of a cup of tea, but it actually grows more beautiful for its aquatic experiences. A sweet little frock, in a clear shade of what is called putty yellow, is made up with bands of Persian cotton embroidery and the waist bottoms in the back, as many wash waists do this season.

It is asserted that the coming will undoubtedly be a white summer. All the white fabrics, from India to the Alps, will be popular. Wide, soft, white will be the favorite part of summer costumes.

White muslin in soft flush will be a favored material for costumes. Flowered muslins will be made up over white for a fresh, dainty effect.

Hats trimmed with the tiny Dresden roses will be a very charming complement.

When the summer sun is bright and strong enough for garden parties we will see adorable frocks of very thin pastel colored crepe de chine and hapsie tucked in sunburst effects. The center of every sunburst will be a flower of lace applied flat.

Have you ever asked a young woman who she dresses to please? says an exchange, she will invariably answer herself, but the statement is mendacious in every instance, save in those of the dress-reformer—and that means the woman who don't hope!

In the palmy days of Greece three philosophers sat against the sunny side of the temple, scratching themselves and discussing the infinite and the branches thereof.

"A woman," said one, "dresses to please the men."

"A woman," said the other, assertively, "dresses to worry the other woman."

The discussion waxed acrimonious until both appealed to the third, who belonged to the school of the trimmer. "A woman," said he, "dresses to please the men, and thereby worry the other woman."

A very pretty idea that originated with a defunct Lady Airle, and which has been revived by Lady Warwick, is the planting of a Garden of Friendship.

The following should refute a too popular theory: "The minister's wife had the floor. There is a general belief," she said, "that ministers' families live the life of private households. Salaries are not large, as a rule, but the perquisites supposed to flow upward are the envy of congregations and the envy of the laity."

Every one will tell you that the rail reads give us passes or half fares and that hotels invite us to make long stays at merely nominal cost. The school boy, however, in fact, multiplies pay exactly the mileage on railways that other people do, on missions, on the sea, on the land, on the air. No difference is made at hotels, and if there are any perquisites at all, they are given to the minister's wife. I have yet to find out what they are—and I've been a poor minister's wife nearly a score of years. Yet a member of the guild told me the other day that I ought to thank my stars that I had been born lucky instead of rich."

There is too great a lack in the practical education of our girls. Such a practical phase of a woman's life as the realization and meeting of honest obligations never enters into a girl's studies at school, college, or in the vast majority of cases, even at home. We go on and let our girls study useless ologies and isms, and accumulate a vast amount of undigested and unintelligible information when never even for a single moment, will be of the slightest use to them in their lives. But of the practical things, yes, the fundamental principles which must govern their lives, they are taught either nothing or a little.

There is where we are floundering in this country, despite our boasts of progress in matters educational. The things we ought to know we know not, and the things which avail little are often our choicest boasts.—Edward Bok, in The Ladies' Home Journal for June.

A SHATTERED IDEAL. AT SIXTEEN. "Oh, the man whom I wed must be handsome and tall."

Said a maiden just out of her frocks: "I can't love a man who is statue is small. And I won't marry houses and stocks. Of course, he must keep me as a papa does now."

But I'll start on an income quite small. But I never will marry—and mark well her vow—"A man who is not six feet tall."

AT TWENTY-THREE. "I think that tall men are so nice," said this girl.

"But, of course, I'll not marry for looks; Big, broad-shouldered fellows, with hair that will curl."

The kind you read of in books. I love to see men who walk, head erect. Their chests expanded with pride; And deep in my heart I hope and expect To be such a man's darling bride."

AT TWENTY-EIGHT. She was nervous, of course, as she walked up the aisle. And she looked as she wished it were over.

But she held by the arm, with a conquering smile. A man who was scarce five feet four.—Detroit Free Press.

LET US BELIEVE. Let us believe That there is hope for all the hearts that grieve; That somewhere night Drifts to a morning beautiful with light. And that the wrong— Though now it triumphs, wields no scepter long. But right will reign. Throned where the waves of Error beat in vain!—FRANK L. STANTON.

FOR JUNE BRIDES. To the lot of June brides fall the exquisite lace, chiffon and net gowns that are known the latest novelties. Liberty silk, crepe de chine and louisine are also pressed into service, and there are some qualities of the latest named soft silk that make up most charmingly in the rather simple outlines that are fashionable for wedding gowns this season. The princess is the favorite form, but very much softened and improved by the folds of the material being draped across the upper part of the waist and also the upper part of the skirt, where they are caught with a long spray of orange blossoms and a chiffon rosette.

When the gown is made with a regular waist this is made invariably with a long pointed effect in front, but always soft folds are draped in surplus fashion, or caught up at one side with sprays of the orange blossoms. A rather classical wedding gown of white crepe de chine made in princess style has a band of seed pearls in a Grecian pattern around the tunic and up the side. There is a tucked yoke and the undergarment of chiffon, and the yoke is all lined with the same pattern of pearl embroidery. This is decidedly new and most charming and becoming design.

Lilies-of-the-valley form a most appropriate decoration for the bride's gown when orange blossoms are not obtainable. They mingle with admirable effect with lace, tulle and the softer silk, such as peau de soie, loutre and the liberty weaves. They form the border of the panels of a princess gown and are set so closely together that the effect at a distance is that of a fine lace. A bunch of the same blossoms is used to secure the veil upon the collar, and again they form a penitence upon the broad tulle masses that depend from the corsage. The underskirt of this costume, and which will be seen under the panelled princess overdress, is of closely pleated tulle, which material again is used to drap the corsage, and for chemise and undersleeves. The upper and lower portions of sleeve are lace trimmed.—Commercial Appeal.

Yes, sir, I did my best to train my daughter up as an accomplished parliamentarian. I took her to meetings to give her a chance to listen to the rulings of able chairmen and I had her learn the text books on the subject by heart. I thought I had her perfect in the business but I was mistaken. She attended a convention not long ago and pretty soon she had a chance to appeal from a decidedly unjust ruling of the chair, and how do you suppose she did it? "Well," "She was excited, you know, and this is what she said: 'You are a mean old fright and I just hate you.' So there!" And then she burst into tears and went down. No, sir, woman's nature will have to change before she will ever become a parliamentarian!—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Unless there is some imperative reason for a contrary policy, it is always wise to let other people's business alone."

THE CHILDREN'S CORNER

"Put in your thumb and pull out a wart and say: What a smart child am I."

CHILD OF THE NEW CENTURY. A little child, whose tender feet Upon the century's threshold stand, What go you undismayed to meet? What will the yenia pour its law upon her?

We know that science plumes her wings For wilder and more wondrous flight. That wealth on high her signal rings, And Art, responsive, leaps to light.

We know that men will wiser grow, But will the tender heart keep pace? Will men love and pity know For each downtrodden, helpless race?

Will the dumb creatures God has made Who brighten earth and share our toil, To you for help come untrayed, Nor from your cruelty recoil?

The answers to my questions lie, In little child, within your heart; They will become earth's battle cry, As the century shall depart. —NINETEEN M. LOWATER, in Christian Work.

NEVER MIND. When I enter stub my toe In the rocky road, Mother, she could soothe my woe: She's the one that knows how to brush my slumbers away With a word so kind. It stopped burlesque when she'd say: "Sonny, never mind."

Archie, an' lint an' things Couldn't stop the pain, But her gentle voice that rings Of an' again In my dreamin', had a charm Strong, tho' undrawn. Jes' them words 'ud help the harm— "Sonny, never mind."

If she only could be scar When I stumble now, Maybe I could persevere With a placid brow— If she Jos' could pat my head, As when she would bind Every hoyish hurt, an' bid: "Sonny, never mind." —Washington Star.

SMALL BOY AND QVO VADIS. The small boy who seeks the "Qvo

Vadis" books in front of the New V. theatre was exercising his lungs to the extreme limit when a diminutive newsboy approached him. "Qvo Vadis!" only 10 cents! Sing-lug-wiehe's great book, only 10 cents!" yelled the dealer in literature. "What's de name—me hearin' ain't good?" Inquired the boy with the bundle of papers. "Qvo Vadis!" only 10 cents! G'wan! youse ain't got no answer comin' to youse!" replied the bookseller contemptuously. "Huh!" said the boy with the papers, "I'll bet youse a nix youse don't know what's de meanin' of that 'Qvo Vadis' youse is trunnin' out your chest about!" "Youse is on fer a nix!" answered the bookseller. "Dea what's de answer?" "Is youse 'trustin' fer knowledge?" inquired the bookseller. "I got a 'trist on me 'tree feet long an' I'll take a alckle's worth," said the boy with the papers. "An' youse wants to know 'Qvo Vadis' meanin' of 'Qvo Vadis'?" "Dat's de game." "Well," answered the bookseller, "a Devo book an' 'Qvo Vadis' you goin' at?"—New York Journal.

PRECOCIOUS YOUTH. It was on a steam railway going from Washington to Philadelphia that I overheard the following conversation between a little boy, just at the interesting age, anxious to know, and his aunt, whose patience was severely tested by the questions of little Willie. The first to attract his attention was a buzzard flying high in the air.

"Oh, auntie," he exclaimed, "look at that chicken way up there." "That's no chicken, Willie, that's a buzzard."

"But, auntie, I don't hear him buzz." "Auntie, look at that man pump the cow; is she punctured?" "He is milking the cow, Willie. Do be still for awhile."

After awhile, he spied several pumpkins in a field, and asked: "Auntie, is a pumpkin a grown-up orange?" Auntie kept quiet in hopes of bringing him to a stop.

Next to meet his gaze was a man walking through the car. "Auntie, is that man drunk?" "Hush, Willie; it is the motion of the car that makes him walk so crooked."

"But, auntie, papa walks that way on the street when he leaves the club." "Will you be quiet for a while, if you please?" "Auntie, look at the moon. Where did all the stars come from?" "I don't know, Willie. Don't ask so many questions."

"Did the moon lay 'em, auntie?" And as darkness drew on little Willie began to nod, and auntie gave a sigh of relief.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

JUST SO. It is one of the prime secrets of happiness to recognize and accept one's natural limitations, but philosophy of this kind is perhaps hardly to be expected of children.

A little girl had sent back her plate for turkey two or three times, and had been helped bountifully to all the good things that go to make up a grand Christmas dinner. Finally she was observed looking rather disconsolately at her unfinished plate of trifle.

"What's the matter, Ethel?" asked Uncle John. "You look mournful." "That's just the matter," said Ethel. "I am mor'n' full."

And then she wondered why everybody laughed.—From Story Stories.

LED ALL THE REST. "Now," said the public school teacher, "name the presidents in that order." "Adams, Washington," began the bright little girl.

"Wrong, Washington was first." "Oh, no, Mr. Adams must have been first, 'cause my Sunday school teacher told me he was the first man."—Philadelphia Press.

SONG OF THE OPEN TROLLEY. When drenching torrents fall to earth Or chilling breezes gambol, Tie them I leave my dismal shed And o'er the city amble. The rain it soaks my bouncing floor With many a flowing puddle, While flapping curtains shape their drips.

Where happy people huddle, My seats are soaked at either end. I'm full of mud—O, golly, You can not guess what fun I To be an open trolley.

Where sunny skies announce the town I'd rather keep my stable, But let it rain, I hustle out As fast as I am able. The cooler blows the sudden gale, The happier it makes me, And I can offer lively times To every one who takes me.

Zip—Clang! my cheerful crossing gang Sends forth its joyous realization, And, dipping wet, I scamper on—O, darn the public's feelings.

I love to dump an angry man Where mud is thickest lying. To hear him part his words profane And then go past him flying. It also makes me glad to see The patient people standing, While dripping fast on every hat, A waterfall is hanging.

I wonder why they take me off In freezing winter weather; We're the boss, I'd do away With shut cars altogether. —Arthur H. Folwell in Brooklyn Eagle. Subscribe for The Chat.
